DESCRIPTION

Rebecca has always hated her nose. She spent years researching doctors and costs, and saving her money so she could one day get the surgery. Now that she's had it, she's thrilled with her new face, and feels much more confident. Her Improv group has noticed she seems happier at performances and it has had a positive impact on the whole team. She's now looking at botox to help fill some wrinkles she doesn't quite love. Her friend has also told her about a different procedure that achieves similar results, and she is looking into that one since it has been recommended by a friend who looks great.

FRUSTRATIONS

- » Extremely high costs associated with her surgery.
- » Lack of an understanding about recovery times and healing progression expectations.
- » Very transactional feel to cosmetic procedures, and she would like the doctor to appear to care more.

What's Important to her:

Rebecca wants to understand costs and recovery expectations from the get-go, and communicate with a doctor that understands her concerns. She wants to keep a natural, youthful look that doesn't look like she's had work done.
